Premier will resign post to begin a life of peace, love, and organic farming

PREMIER Ed Stelmach announced Tuesday that he would soon be relinquishing his duties as Alberta Premier so that he may pursue lifelong aspirations of starting a hippie commune south of Alberta. Hippie communes, also known as “paisley pits” and “grass groupings” were once widespread in the ’60s, and usually consist of self-sustaining farming communities, recreational drug abuse, and a general no-care attitude. Stelmach’s new commune will be a self-styled “commune of peace and sharing.”

Free press goes too far

MOHINDER BOBINDER
for Metraux Deadmonton

In response to a racially controversial article which was published in Metraux last week, Editor-in-Chief Dyke Medkrick was swarmed and beaten by a vicious mob of enraged Edmontonians yesterday.

“I didn’t realize that it was racist to drop such colourful slurs in a public forum,” Medkrick claimed, his face horribly disfigured by the muscular contractions of raging white man’s guilt. The paper’s other editors surrounded his hospital bed and grappled with the decision of whether or not to remove his feeding tube, a right not often extended to colleagues.

“The article in question didn’t seem offensive at all. You should have seen what it looked like before I approved it — now that was offensive,” he added before passing out.

Julio Offen-Diaz, a spokesperson for the Students Against Discriminatory Male Editors Now (SADMEN), believes that Medkrick suffers from what he calls “Albertanitis” and can’t grasp the effect of his own words.

“Medkrick has a particularly severe case of Albertanitis,” he explained.

“It seems he is unable to comprehend the social nuances of racism. For instance, he won’t stop calling me a ‘scruffy turnip-herder’ and I genuinely feel we have an otherwise good relationship,” he said while high-fiving Medkrick.

The SADMEN have stopped short of calling for Medkrick’s resignation. They have stated that his condition makes him a prime candidate for rehabilitation so that he can use more thoughtful and positive racial language. As part of the program, he will soon begin participating in group therapy sessions, which involves writing and performing a culturally inclusive play for a charity audience composed entirely of racial minorities.

“We had to stop him when he suggested performing an Al Jolson-inspired blackface song-and-dance routine [...] So obviously, he’s still got a ways to go,” Offen-Diaz said.

PETA protests media circus

Animal rights activists picketed media offices across Edmonton speaking out about cruelty related to the media circus

PAUL BARNUM
for Metraux Deadmonton

Protesters claim the circus — organized by multiple media outlets desperate for copy to fill space by deadline — creates a lavish big-top spectacle out of trivial, meaningless stories like the infidelity of pro athletes, escaped birds in an urban environment, and hundreds of rabbits squatting in an abandoned residence. According to protest organizers, it features exotic journalists who’ve been wrenched from their natural habitat, including anchors, camera crews, and editors — most of whom have no rights and are shamefully non-unionized.

“It is an absolute travesty the conditions that these reporters have to survive in,” said Ellen Thomas, a local leader of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) who coordinated Tuesday’s protest.

“They’re forced to parade around endlessly for the amusement of newspaper subscribers, travelling miles in order to interview some old lady whose cat called 911 when she tumbled down the stairs. Afterward, these gentle beasts of burden must slave over their laptop so their degrading, subpar story can run on the 6 p.m. news.”

Thomas explained that such horrific conditions can create a media “feeding frenzy” where journalists starving for a hot story will revert to a violent primitive survival state, clawing each other to death to get any “scoop.” PETA activists have begun using tactics such as throwing red paint on reporters’ notepads and recorders in hopes of diffusing their hysteria.

“They’re then kept muzzled and caged in cramped SUVs, horrifically chained to their BlackBerrys — all simply because it’s a slow news day.”
Ellen Thomas for PETA

“Much like humans, journalists suffer pain and have the capacity to feel fear, mostly regarding their continued employment,” explained Thomas. “Yet, despite how many claim they are ‘mad as hell and not going to take it anymore,’ many captive journalists these days do end up taking it for many, many years.”

However, circus organizers were quick to defend their business practices as mindless entertainment.

“We provide them with coffee, regular exercise, medical/dental coverage, and food pellets. Our animals tend to live twice as long in captivity as they do when they’re out in the wild freelancing,” said George Burnett, a local magazine publisher.

PETA protesters said that it was easy to abuse reporters as Canadian anti-debasement laws are unfortunately too lenient. Despite their efforts, local supporters say that they see little progress.

“It seems that this media circus shows no signs of ending, Gord. Up next, a girl, who at only two years old has learned to tap dance” stated Global News personality Lynda Steele.

Katz knocks arena into orbit

New stadium expected to elevate urban profile cosmically

In a bid to assuage crotchety noise allowance of downtown seniors and planners of the Edmonton Oilers' new hockey arena, the City of Edmonton has brought forward a proposal to place the facility in low-earth orbit.

Head city planner Robert Princely said the new proposal would put the arena, along with the accompanying retail outlets, into orbit 1,500 kilometres above the Earth. The plan would, however, put the city on the hook for an extra $2.6 trillion.

At least it would "shut up those stupid whiners," he said.

"I'm sick and tired of all these people bitching about how this new arena will devastate the downtown core. I'm tired of it. You don't want your valuable parking going away? Fine, we'll put this bitch in space."

The new arena will feature badass blue shit all over the outside! How chic.

The $2.6-trillion plan would include a number of retail outlets, as well as a nanoparticle space elevator. Unfortunately, it will only be able to accommodate 25 people at a time. At that rate, it will take about 2.5 days to fill the new 22,000-seat arena.

The revisions come in response to a recent student referendum which rejected funding for a charitable organization, showing the institution is "breeding a bunch of Hitlers."

"The program offers a fair, balanced look at the many strengths of the Aryan race," noted department head Emerson Charles.

Oblivious student mauled in Africa

Edmonton A University of Alberta student working on a poverty reduction project has been killed while performing aide work in Africa with the locals he set out to help.

After wrangling enough spare change together by telling students his bake sale profits would directly benefit them, Parker McCorndick visited one of the charity sites in Sauri, Kenya to make sure there were no hard feelings, and continue progress on the aide project.

"If we don't fix this world, starving locals could turn into terrorists. Terrorists mixed with hunger equals one thing: bombs.

If we don't share our wealth, we're making ourselves a target for those backwards savages," McCorndick said begrudgingly.

According to Titsoya Dagembaraya, leader of the local population and one of those who stands accused of complacency in the activist's death, McCorndick often complained about U of A students while telling the villagers what was best for them according to his own sheltered western world view.

"All he ever talked about were the Nazis and dictators that he left behind on the U of A campus," Dagembaraya said.

While supervising and instructing a group of Sauri workers, McCorndick insisted on taking a shortcut through a gorge at the protest of the locals. According to reports, an incident took place resulting in McCorndick's death, allegedly under the watch of the Sauri workers. Accounts of the event vary, but all agree that McCorndick remained obnoxious-ly indignant until the end.

"We stumbled on a group of lions," recounted Kamau Moyo. "We told him to stand still and avoid eye contact, but he kept rambling about saving them from these dismal conditions."

Devastated woman loses $20.60 in lottery bust

A local multi-million dollar mystery lottery loser is a mystery no longer.

36-year-old Amber Donohue, an unemployed mother of three, came forward last Thursday to announce that she had lost $20.60 playing the recent Lotto 6/49 jackpot, whose actual winner walked away with over $30 million.

"I don't even really know what to say. This is probably going to go down as one of the most average days of my life," said a stunned Donohue.

The remarkably unlucky woman had purchased just over $20 of Lotto 6/49 tickets in anticipation of the upcoming jackpot, thanks to her devastating misunderstanding of probability. Donohue then forgot her tickets in her coat pocket. After it was announced that someone had already claimed the prize, Donohue found the tickets, checked the numbers online, and was shocked to find out that she had wasted not only her money, but her time as well.

"I couldn't believe my eyes. But there it was, right there on the screen — 4, 8, 15, 16, 23, 42. All numbers that I hadn't picked. I then carefully ripped up my tickets, so that no one would know of my new-found misfortunes."

Before she managed to avoid hitting pay dirt, Donohue had just under $200 in her bank account. Now, with even less money in her pocket, she's planning on getting that new house foreclosure she never wanted.

Obama instructs nation to “get red or get fucked”

COMMUNISM U.S. President Barack Obama has announced that the rest of the country’s services will be universalized after receiving positive reviews from citizens over the announcement of universal health care.

The move will invariably make the country more of a “socialist empire” than it is presently, Obama admits, but he claims that “the hillbillies” will get used to the switch.

“You’re either with us in a peaceful network of co-dependence, or you’re against us,” Obama said.

Critics are saying that copying the socialist system might yield negative results, such as the soon-to-be-universalized sexual reassignment program.

“This is insane,” said Karl Lupwitz, surgeon at the University of Michigan. “We’ve had over 10,000 applicants in the last week. Some people are just changing back and forth for fun, but we can’t say no.”

Secret society inconveniences students

U of A students: “really not surprised”

SECRETS Sidewalk distributors of Metraux have formed their own secret society with the aim of making pedestrians as late for appointments as possible

According to an internal memo obtained by Metraux News, Metraux Secret Society workers have strategically placed themselves in downtown areas and university campuses where there are hurried individuals, and are training their peers with an array of tactics to purposefully impede students going to class.

“I have to get up at the crack of dawn to distribute a rag. So why shouldn’t I make other people angry and miserable? And what makes people more upset than being late?” said Carl Spinx, a paper distributor with Metraux.

Spinx, who’s been working with the daily newspaper for six years, said that the MSS is underground, and management is only just becoming aware of their existence superiors knowing that we’ve made this our goal. But we take our task very seriously,” he told reporters.

Some of their techniques include animalistic gyration, physical violence, and less frequently, the promise of a free beer coupon at the campus eatery Room at the Top.

“We at the MSS are always trying to think of new ways to get in the way and make people late. We don’t care if they take a copy or not. That’s not our mandate. Our mandate is to make people angrier and more late than ever.”

“Honestly, we can’t stop them. They get up way too early,” said Metraux distribution supervisor Clarke Grumble.

“Tell me how you stop someone who practically lives on the streets from beating you to the office. I don’t even know who works for me anymore. The papers just disappear.”

“I don’t know how they can allow this,” said Christie Permunt, a U of A engineering student.

“Plus, they’re totally gross. Have you ever taken a paper from them? I can’t get the smell of poverty off my hands for hours afterwards. It’s not just an inconvenience, it’s classless.”

City bylaws are pending that would allow all paper carriers guilty of mean-spirited distribution of free publications to be punched in the nuts (or approximate organs).

OSHAWA Customer satisfaction takes a fiery backseat

Toyota’s design woes continue to hurt the company’s safety image as ParaBrakes are being blamed for more and more fatalities. Besides proving to be incredibly dangerous, the two hour packing time for each parachute deployment is hurting consumer reviews.

Toyota death toll rises

Just as the economic woes of their massive spring recall of Camrys and Priuses dissipates, Toyota has begun a recall of Corollas installed with their new ParaBrake braking system after a rash of accidents.

“At Toyota, we are constantly trying to innovate. But it appears with recent events that our groundbreaking parachute brake design, used for years to effectively slow down Indy 500 racers, does not meet the needs of the average motorist,” read a statement released by the company.

The response comes after Transport Canada commissioned a report from an independent research group about hundreds of recent fatalities occurring in the scandal-ridden Japanese automaker’s flagship model.

“It seems that many Corolla drivers would repeatedly press on what they believed were unresponsive brake pedals, not realizing that a massive

10-metre long parachute had, in fact, opened out of their trunk compartment and was gradually slowing them down,” an incredulous Toyota spokesperson testified at a recent court case being brought against Toyota for the miss communication in braking technology.

Neil Douglas, principle investigator of the research group, explained that the ParaBrake model had several problems not detected through Toyota’s product testing.

“On straight test tracks, parachute deployment brought the passengers to a halt peacefully over a distance of approximately three kilometres,” Douglas said.

“This design proved effective until the product hit the market. When deployed in traffic, the chute blocked the visibility of the driver behind the car, causing them to veer right into oncoming traffic.”

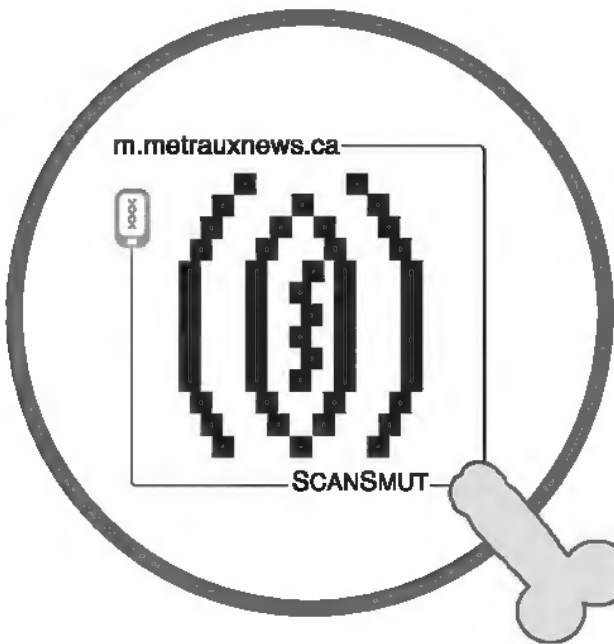

The study also found that ParaBrake was relatively inconvenient for drivers.

According to industry insiders, the ParaBrake system may become the biggest scandal to rock an automobile company since the failure of Ford’s JettiSonar Smart Impact system, which used radar technology to anticipate high-speed collisions and automatically eject passengers out of the car to safety.

MP’s electricity-scorched nipples create buzz

FUCK-UPS The public relations records of some American and Canadian top executive aides have taken a battering recently.

Weeks after a nearby mic caught American Vice President Joe Biden telling Barack Obama that health care reform was “a big fucking deal,” Canada’s defence Minister Peter MacKay is also red-faced following salacious remarks caught on tape during a press conference.

MacKay was fielding questions yesterday on the Afghan scandal related to allegations of torture inflicted upon prisoners taken by the Canadian military, and was joined by Prime Minister Stephen Harper, who was also prepared to make a statement.

“They think what this is is torture — that’s bullshit. You should have seen the defiling abuse I took at the Masochist’s Mirth last night,” MacKay was overheard saying to Harper before he took the podium.

The comments referenced a visit to a bondage-themed nightclub near Parliament Hill that’s frequented by MPs. “Waterboarding my ass. Try having your nipples shocked while your head’s underwater, and dental floss is wrapped around your cock like a hangman’s noose.”

No one from Masochist’s Mirth was available for public comment, but one bartender from the nightclub acknowledged MacKay made frequent visits.

“MacKay, he always knows how to party. He has a nasty habit of shouting silly things when under pressure — dirty, silly, sexy things,” he said.

MacKay was rather unapologetic, saying that his wording just indicates his passionate feelings on the issue of torture.

“I speak colloquially to the Prime Minister as I often do when we’re in private,” MacKay said later, defending his actions. “I didn’t realize the sound would be picked up. Leave it to the media to make everything into a big fucking deal.”

Israel-Palestine dodgeball game scheduled

In order to settle over 50 years of occupation and border disputes, the governments of Israel and Palestine have arranged a giant dodgeball game in the Gaza Strip on Saturday at noon. Each side has been instructed to select 1,000 of their most adept athletes to try to eliminate the others' team. Experts predict a Palestinian victory given the years of experience many citizens have with whipping debris at Israeli tanks in protest of their occupation.

Pope apologizes to priests for ordeal

His Holiness Pope Benedict XVI responded to thousands of new Catholic sexual abuse allegations this week by publicly apologizing to the tens of thousands of priests for the horrific temptations that they were forced to endure from sexy altar boys.

He condemned promiscuous children worldwide for leading his clergy astray.

"It is with profound sadness and fortuitous regret that thousands of the Lord's shepherds have had their public images viciously abused by the media, after being forced to hide the indiscretions of their sacrosanct flock for decades in shame," Benedict stated.

"These priests trusted these devious cherubs to lead them to Christ. Alas, the temptations of youth were too great and they were forced into a life of sodomy — a life they should have known to hide behind closed doors."

The Pope became implicated in the scandal when it was claimed that in the 1970s, as a Cardinal, he refused to defrock Rev. Lawrence C. Murphy, who had allegedly abused over 200 deaf boys. The pressure intensified when photos emerged of Benedict smiling, giving the thumbs-up, and mocking American sign language as Murphy sodomized an altar boy, evidence that the Pope said was "baseless."

"As the Lord stated in Corinthians 6:9, 'If ye unmarried messenger of the Father hath coveted the sweet ass of a lamb, he hath not sinned and shall suffer no holy retribution.' Indeed, by the glory and graces of God, the Catholic Church will remain the light that guides the faithful away from the activities of the shadows."

Coulter, who once believed airport security could be dispensed with if Muslims boycotted planes, says it was the rigid patriarchy that attracted her to the faith.

Conservative pundit Coulter converts to Islam, citing politics

MECCA Citing "passivity" within Christianity, controversial conservative pundit Ann Coulter has converted to Islam.

"I've come to accept the last revelation as the truest one," she told reporters.

Other commentators have speculated that it's the political norms of some Islamic countries that attracted Coulter to the faith.

"Look at how they develop their oil resources here. Look at how low their taxes are," she said from Mecca. "I've said it before: God — I mean, Allah — gave us the earth. We have dominion over the plants, the animals, the trees. The lower species are here for our use. Go forth, be fruitful, multiply, and rape the planet — it's yours."

She cited other ideological parallels to her own.

"Women don't even get to vote here — something I've always said can prevent those bitch-ass liberals from getting power. We should invade the west, kill their socialist leaders, and convert them."

Worth Intervening

I'm motherfuckin' Daryl Katz

ARENA Hey slick, how's the family? That's good. That's good to hear. Hey, now shut up for a second, champ. Just shut the fuck up. Because I'm afraid this ain't a social call — I'm here to talk business. Kapiche?

About that whole arena thing we've been letting marinate for the last while ... I know I've been talkin' a little game around these parts. But that scratch I promised I'd chip in for the whole shebang-a-bang? Well, I've done some thinkin', and I'd feel guilty putting my hard-earned dough on the block when you fine city folk might be willing to cough up the Benjamins for such a damn sexy investment.

I mean, you gotta remember, sucka, this ain't my arena — this here is your turf. I'll do what I can to chip in. I'll choose the design, keep everyone on my watch, and make sure the bitch gets flipped, then drop by after hours to pick up the cheddar. But I really think we need to look at how much this whole arrangement benefits you. I mean, you don't wanna be some dipshit livin' in a remote, backwater, ugly hick-ridden hellhole where the only claim to fame is a fuckin' mall, do ya?

Of course not. This new arena ain't about me — it's about gettin' you laid and me paid, pal.

Look at what happened with Lucas Oil Stadium in Indiana — sure, the city is raisin' taxes, takin' loans, and bleedin' red while the Colts rake in the dough, but you know what, buddy? People in Indiana just have to play the arena card and they get the pussy. We need to earn that "City of Champions" label, right, young blood?

All I can tell you is that right here in this briefcase are some of the finest arena schematics this city's ever motherfuckin' seen. Pure, 100 per cent uncut stadium, some of the finest shit you'll find this side of the North Saskatchewan.

Anyways, let me know when you finally get off your ass and get that scratch together, because I'd really hate for my boys to have to take a Louisville Slugger to your kneecaps, ya hear? They keep telling me to stop taking your shit and let them cut off your fingers one by one. But I'm a nice guy. I'd hate to let this business get in the way of our friendship. Cheers, kid. Let's make it rain.

Pants Muddick

metrauxnews.ca/sexypants

Sex is great — at least from what I've seen in the movies or on TV. Though lately, I've gained a lot of appreciation for the much-misunderstood "circle jerk." Lately, masturbating in a circle has been my favourite way to unwind after a hard day of jerking off alone in my apartment.

I call up the gang and say, "Dudes! My place. Tonight. Bring lube." My buddies used to play poker every Thursday, but we got tired of that because we were essentially just trading money back and forth. Now, we get together and share in an intimate bond of tugging at each other in a circle of life.

It's not a gay thing either. Sure, some of us are bisexual and a few of us enjoy an animal on the side every once in a while, but it's not about sexual preference in this group so much as it's simply an exercise that involves coming at some point.

These people are my brothers. I respect their bodies as if they were my own. When I jerk off my buddy Tory, it's almost as if I'm being stimulated as well. He's totally ripped, but I'm almost as ripped as he is. And Devon's body is shaping up not bad since he started going to the gym.

We're all good circle jerkers. Just ask Randy; he'll tell you the same thing. Though if you put in enough time, you might become as good at jerking in a circle as us.

Masturbate at home for practice, but remember there's only one "I" in "Circle jerk." You need all the other letters to make the masturbation an experience all members can enjoy.

Pants Muddick is a world champion masturbator with four regional titles who likes to jerk off to /b/

Fran Mimes

metrauxnews.ca/mimefight

This last week has been full of Easter celebrations. Amidst the egg painting, turkey roasting, spring cleaning, diaper changing, and everything else a middle-aged housewife like me has to go through, I haven't found any me-time. Time for myself, because I get to have selfish desires, too. You know, time to watch Ellen. Time to have a margarita. Time to attempt those difficult crosswords in Metraux.

I don't get a single minute alone to pleasure myself. I have to work long hard hours, day and night, to care for my children and my husband. And he thinks he's the provider, the man of the house. He's not even the one bringing home the proverbial bacon. He doesn't understand how much shit I do to keep this home afloat. I keep this home afloat.

It's a well-known fact that you all care about my personal life.

So allow me to indulge a little more.

Every man wonders how well they perform in bed, and every woman wonders how well other men perform in bed, and I wonder why my husband loves to prematurely ejaculate. If he can't even provide in bed, why should I be depending on him in the household?

I'm the one who goes the extra mile to write a self-sustained column in this paper of the utmost excellent quality. I've written books for Christ's sake. Three novels and a collection of nonfiction humour. I bet you wish you could be as successful as I am.

Stop whining about the recession and nonsense like that, if you can't even write three novels and a collection of nonfiction humour.

Yeah, so I'm bitchy and on a bout of PMS right now. I'm going to go back into the washroom and drain my vag. Don't fuck with me.

Fran Mimes is a bitch. She has written three novels and one collection of nonfiction humour.

Loonie at drug parity

After making strides due to a burgeoning Canadian economy and strong dank bud momentum, the loonie is now close to being on par with the U.S. dollar for purchases of primo shit that will get users high as fuck.

The dollar spent Wednesday hovering around parity, at points reaching as high as 39.57 cents US for a 40 bag, or $199.46 US for an 8-ball. It represents the first time since 2008 that the loonie is equal to the U.S. greenback, the market standard for securing commodities of tight-ass scores.

"Last year, trading in the drug market was hit by the economic downturn, preventing guys like your buddy George from transporting his stash of B.C. Hydro from the west coast, since his broke ass couldn't afford gas," said Jeffrey Orenburger, Chief Economist for TD Bank & Trust.

"As such, investors had been diversifying their stock portfolios with other assets, such as mutual funds, GICs, and prescription medications. But with the economy rebounding and demand for the motherfucking chronic at record highs, the recent upswing in loonie momentum has seen more and more local black market shareholders exchanging Queen for green. The number of bowls I've seen cashed in the last month has been really positive. Like, really fucking positive."

85% The amount of marijuana that I roll into joints, as opposed to the 13 per cent that I smoke out of a bong I made with a plastic bottle and a straw from McDonalds.

Orenburger added that the manufacturing sector has also been buoyed by the strong Canadian currency.

"In the past month, nearly half of the meth producers who were found after their lab exploded had dollars on them. It's very optimistic."

Though long-term forecasts remain high, some local economists are anticipating a decrease in cross-border market activity due to the strong dollar. This has led to fears that more Canadians will attempt to hook their customers up with the number of a guy south of the border, potentially devastating domestic revenue.

"I told my buddy Tom that I could have it to him by Friday, but he said he'd found cheaper from that American fucker Dennis Johnson," said Gary Horton, an Edmonton-area drug market analyst. "You can't just request speedballs, then take your business to that [American fucker]. That is some cold shit."

Ferbey 3:16 says, "I just hit-and-sticked your ass"

HARDCORE CURLING In one of the most despicable, underhanded moves I've ever seen in all my years of watching curling, that conniving backstabber Randy "Satan's Skip" Ferbey just nailed his tag-team partner Diamond Dave Nedohin in the back with a thunderous broom shot, and announced his allegiance to the evil Newfoundland Curling Order (nCo) right in the middle of the rings.

Then, out of nowhere, nCo member Brad "The Gush" Gushue continued the beatdown by taking a curling rock to Nedohin's knee, and raising the arm of Satan's Skip, a four-time World Curling Champion.

"For too long, I've been held down by the politics of curling and low-life scum like you," Ferbey exclaimed, pointing to the capacity crowd at Rexall Place. "Boo me all you want — when I'm done hurrying hard, I will reclaim my rightful World Curling Championship! nCo for life!"

As a crowd of crying children and grown men sullenly sipping from their Big Gulps looked on, Rock Hard Kevin Koe's music hit suddenly and his team came sliding down the rink, sending the nCo bolting over the guard rail, promising a real slobber-knocker of a match.

"You've got a lot of nerve pulling that crap, Ferbey! All these years, us Albertans have had nothing but success, and this is how you thank us!? And if you think you're getting your hands on my World Curling Championship, I've got two words for ya!" Koe yelled, miming the "suck it" gesture to a roaring crowd as Monday Night CURL went off the air.

Headshots 'totally wicked'

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman looks to tap into video game enthusiasts with mind-blowing new ideas for game

In a concerted effort to increase viewership and appeal to a demographic of video-game enthusiasts, the NHL announced today that headshots will be officially sanctioned by the Commissioner's office.

Commissioner Gary Bettman clarified that while deliberate hits to the head with one's elbow or shoulder will continue to be disallowed, shots to the head using sniper rifles will be permitted.

In his official statement, Bettman was enthusiastic about the new rule.

"While headshots in the traditional sense will continue to be discouraged and penalized accordingly, it became obvious to the league that headshots like the ones you see in first person shooters should be actively supported because they're totally wicked," Bettman said.

"The NHL has entered a new era. For a long time, the league has been appropriately labelled a boring, second rate product. We're hoping to change our popular perception by allowing players to pwn bitches more effectively."

Bettman, who admitted to be playing a "pretty intense FPS game on [his] new Xbox 360" during his interview with Metraux, was noticeably distract ed during the phone interview. "The only thing that we really had going for us was that the traditional damnit, reload ... reload, fucknuts! Sorry, what was I oh yeah, the only thing we had going was that the traditional rules allowed for players to periodically drop the gloves and go toe to toe," Bettman said. "After getting this Xbox for my birthday, it dawned on me that the NHL should be more like Halo 3," Bettman stated before yelling "Oh shit, that noob just got pwned!" at his television set. "Dad! Stop talking like that! Fuck!" Bettman's daughter screamed in the background. As of press time, the NHLPA could not be reached for comment, but sources close to the player's union have hinted that tonight's games might be delayed until the players finish their game of Counter Strike on Xbox Live.

FATHLETES What do Pablo Sandoval, Prince Fielder, C.C. Sabathia, Keith Tkachuk, and most recently, Shane O'Brien have in common? If you said "a love affair with double cheeseburgers," you're only half right. They also share the same trainer, who has been gaining notoriety across the sporting community for his strange training regimen and the fame garnered from his former position as a fast food spokesperson.

The Hamburglar is back, after being released from his duties in 2007 by McDonald's, when they decided to go in a different direction. The 'Burglar has now become an athletic trainer who emphasizes the "bigger is better" policy amongst his clients — and it's paid off.

"An athlete needs to be well-fed and nothing's better than the "Burger, burger, burger!" diet that I've firmly believed in for more than a decade. My rates are cheap and I've proven to be successful when it comes to getting my clients publicity. [Shane] O'Brien's been all over the news recently for using my diet, and who doesn't remember the video of Andre Smith's phenomenal pro day workout when he ran with no shirt on? Robble Robble!"

As he continues to gain more fame, we are left wondering who's next to call on the Hamburglar.

Oh-no! Oh-yes! Oprah new NHLPA head

BIG FAN Sweet lollipops and gum drops, Oprah Winfrey has arrived to save the day for the NHLPA! With her show set to wrap up next year, the beloved talk show host has decided she needs hockey to fill the void.

"I love hockey! When the NHLPA approached me to lead them, I was honoured because, after all, who has more name recognition than Oprah?" Oprah said.

The move shocked many in the hockey community. Former MLBPA head Donald Fehr looked poised to take over the job, but after giving Fehr the boot at the last minute the NHLPA opted instead for celebrity name recognition over a qualified candidate. Sidney Crosby, who led the "Oprah for NHLPA Prez" campaign within the Players' Association, was more than pleased to see his longtime idol get the job. "She knows the TV business, and most importantly, she knows Tom Cruise," Crosby explained. "I watched her show growing up. I used to tune in every afternoon before practice. She's the reason I got where I am today — she's the talkshow mother I always wanted to have."

Oprah will take the reigns of the organization immediately, and plans to use her final episodes to help promote the game she has come to love overnight. "I really don't know that much about hockey, or the players, but my audience will go wild when I bring those guys on my show and send them all home with ... free Atlanta Thrashers tickets!" Oprah explained. Financial terms of the deal were not disclosed, but sources close to the situation have informed Metraux that Oprah will make "a shit ton of cash."

Death on a fuckin' pita

To the delight of health nuts everywhere, the Tombstone donair from Marco's has made a highly anticipated return.

The beloved creation was put on Marco's menu over two years ago, but was taken off after allegations that the donair caused student Dick Nehod to go into cardiac arrest. Recent reports have shown that his heart attack was in fact caused by over-excitement about dodgeball, and as a result the menu item has returned.

For those not in the know, the Tombstone is the Charizard of donairs. Your standard donair consists of some slow-roasted meat in a thick pita, doused with lettuce, onions, and sauce. When it hits 1,500 calories, it evolves into a Wildcat donair — its meaty innards triple in size, and the vegetable padding solidifies into thick, melted cheese. It gets really tasty when the Wildcat grows, and becomes over 9,000 calories. At this point the donair is impregnated by a skilled Marco's master chef, and in no time at all, there's a full order of poutine inside, completing its journey to becoming a Tombstone.

Yes, that's right. A Tombstone is a donair, triple meat, triple cheese, no veggies, with an order of fuckin' poutine inside.

This isn't a food for the light-hearted. Nor is it made for lazy and obese consumers. The Tombstone is a food for the efficient. While Health Canada recommends a mere 2,000 calories per day, the massive donair comes close to 10,000 calories, or five days of nutrition.

There's your protein, your carbs, your dairy, your meat, your grains, your calcium, and much more. Also, lots and lots of sauce. I even hear they throw breadcrumbs into the meat for filler. That's some gourmet shit right there.

All it needs now are two scoops of double chocolate ice cream. And maple syrup. Then deep-fry it. Mm-mmm.

MEAT HELL

Fabulous Fatties

The fashion world has been recently revitalized through its recognition for the need for plus size clothing. Taking his lead from these plus size pioneers, renegade stylist Giorgio McChanel introduced his new plus plus plus size fashion line for only the most chic of the morbidly obese.

McChanel created his own rules as he got the crowd to walk up and down the catwalk to look at the obese models sitting in their La Z Boys eating food supplied by French sponsor PFK and draped in McChanel's designer floral patterned muumuus. The busy patterns flattered their amorphous forms and provided the perfect backdrop to hide those pesky corn chip crumbs, and the tears of realization that nobody could ever love them.

Despite the oppressive sweat odours, the event was an astounding success. After the runway gala, there was a wine and cheese and BBQ pork rib social, with the models being moved via forklift to their reinforced hammocks before being airlifted home afterward.

That Asian flavour gets stranger and stranger

SUB Western meals can be delicious, yet boring. Thinking that an exotic dish could be a welcome change, I headed down to the rich cultural tapestry that is the Students' Union Building on the U of A campus, which features dishes from such luxurious locales as Mexico, France, and Japan. My instincts oriented me towards the Orient, and nothing says authentic Japanese cuisine like Edo. So I stood in line to place my order, which was taken by a man in the traditional Japanese attire of a company branded baseball cap and matching shirt.

Being a proud Albertan, I was pleased to find that the Japanese regard beef as highly as I do. The Sukiyaki Chicken and Shrimp on Rice was a delectable concoction, rich in both chicken and rice overtones. It went swimmingly with an ice cold glass of genuine Japanese fountain pop. All these years, I had believed that Coca Cola was a North American drink so ignorant of me! Getting a little culture is always an enlightening experience. It positively filled me with glee when the man preparing my food with his spatula and funny Oriental metal bowls asked me how to garnish my food in the traditional way they must do it in the rural countryside of Japan. "Sauce?" the man inquired. "Hai!" I yelled back, laughing to myself as he looked at me funny. He must not have realized that I spoke Hiroshima! In order to show my gratitude, I bowed to him and took my entrée.

To get the most out of my culinary adventure, I ate my main course out of a bona fide styrofoam container much like the ones common during the Tokugawa period — then removed my shoes and sat on the floor. Passersby gave me odd looks, but they had quite obviously never learned how to show respect to another culture. While they did offer the option of using a fork, I chose the traditional method of chopsticks. It sure was tricky! But it was worth it to show that I appreciated another people's history and societal norms. I finished the dish both nutritionally and culturally full. I highly recommend that anyone looking for a genuine Japanese meal head to a nearby Edo. Next time, I am going to wear one of those kimono things and take along a samurai sword.

Nude yoga — the latest fad to come out of the high reaches of the Himalayas. And while the freeing power of old sweaty body parts flopping around seems enticing, some yoga practitioners are denouncing the activity as of fensive due to noxious fumes prevalent in the studios. Clothed practitioners claim the lack of a buffer material allows for the widespread release of offensive flatulence into the air, causing possible health problems and increased awkwardness to the downward dog pose. But enthusiasts of the new nude pastime are fighting back. Fully nude classes have taken over a number of local studios, including "Nanny Nude Yoga," a class for expecting mothers. "It's great," said Yolanda Tipper, whose massive pregnant gut was eclipsed only by her unkempt beaver. "You feel closer to nature."

Lululemon has capitalized on the fad, marketing invisible yoga pants and mats to nude yoga fans, selling for $250 each.

You will always be a repulsive slob: study

A team composed of dozens of North America's most prominent medical researchers has concluded that your body and lifestyle are reprehensibly unhealthy, and will eventually lead to impotence, hypertension, diabetes, brain stem hemorrhage, cardiac arrest, and myriad other adverse effects.

"Yeah, yeah — I'm sure you'll claim that you've put in a valiant effort to eat a balanced diet, get regular exercise, receive adequate sleep, and abstain from smoking and heavy alcohol intake," Dr. Thomas Reeder of the Mayo Clinic stated. "Bullshit. As a distinguished physician, I'm disgusted to look at that hideous clump of cells that you disgrace the human species by calling a body."

Reeder, the lead researcher on the project, asserted that in spite of your best efforts, your body fat percentage is far from ideal, your sodium intake and blood pressure are far too high, you eat too much processed food, and what you consider social drinking is actually binge drinking. You're also repulsively ugly.

"Having to study this subject matter over the past several months was nauseating," Reeder added. "But it's the kind of work that must be done in order for people like to have higher self-esteem by comparison. That's why we go to university for 10 years."

The team further recommended that attraction to your body should be a recognized psychiatric condition under the upcoming DSM-5, so that suffers could get finally get adequate treatment for the distress and guilt resulting from being seen in public with someone so repulsive.

Walk, walk fashion baby

Sometimes being fashionable just means wearing lots of crazy shit on your body, and Lady Gaga has surely proven this. Sure, she does wear cool space-agey dresses on occasion, but then sometimes she'll show up to the VMAs wearing nothing but an outfit made up of live hedgehogs and it's just inappropriate. But also kind of hot in a weird way.

But now you too can be inappropriate and inexplicable just like Lady Gaga! All it really takes is some random crap and a little tenacity, but you can also be lauded for your daring fashion sense while wearing what is essentially garbage.

Say Hello to the Cable Boy

Fashion ain't just for the ladies anymore. Lady Gaga, in order to shamelessly increase her notoriety earlier in her career, had to wear outfits that implied the dick, and she wore it well. Thus, for the bros out there, you're already ahead of the game since you already have a beaver cleaver.

The theme in this outfit is definitely metallic, vaguely futuristic crap. If you don't have any sense for what the future will actually look like, taping scrap circuitry from your Apple II should suffice. You can see how this shameful human being subtly uses keyboards to accessorize in order to cover up the more horrifying areas. It also never hurts to have dinosaurs around for what should be obvious reasons.

Bottled Sexy

When you open up your closet and think, "I have nothing to wear! Why God, why!?" take comfort in the fact that when you dress like Lady Gaga, your recycling bin doubles as an armoire. As seen in her "Telephone" video, cans of Coke will make your haircut the talk of town. But make sure the cans are completely empty, because sugary brown liquid slowly dripping onto your head may seem attractive at first, but it's just gonna leave you sticky.

Popcorn sunglasses are also in this season. If you're working on a budget and have a lot of patience, you could just tape corn to your glasses and let Father Time make love all over them. But if your girlfriends are waiting and you got to get to the club, movie popcorn is like four bucks.

And once you're done dancing to "Poker Face," you can come home and know that your glasses are edible, and that you'll be able to partially recoup whatever you spent last night the next time you hit up the bottle depot.

A Girl and Her Boobs Fight a Shark Director: Ron Howard

WHEN THE HILLS' HEIDI Montag said she was turning to screenwriting to jump start a film career, I was skeptical, but interested, in what kind of crap she was going write about. I was not disappointed.

"I'm making the first 3-D beach comedy about a shark that attacks a small beach town and I save the day with my 3-D boobs," Montag told People in an exclusive interview. "I've even written a role for Dolly Parton to play the town mayor!"

I want to emphasize that the above quote is, in fact, real.

Now that the film is finally out, I can say that Montag was true to her word, and it's just the right kind of clusterfuck to make it the surprise hit of the year.

Summer Sommers (Montag) is a down-on-her-luck lifeguard living in Party Town, USA. She's also, arguably, the best lifeguard in town because her numerous plastic surgeries have given her body an unusually buoyant quality. Throughout the course of the film, her breasts become known as the safest life preservers in town. Later on, she becomes especially famous after she saves Anderson Cooper from being nearly eaten by the Evil Devil Shark (played by Danny DeVito).

The Shark — humiliated and quite famished — decides to take revenge, Jaws IV-style. It harasses Montag by pointing out the numerous fabrications The Hills passed off as truth, even going as far to claim that a talking shark would feel at home on the so-called "reality" program.

While it wasn't exactly the funniest film I've seen in recent memory, it was an emotional roller coaster from start to finish. The part where a 3-D Spencer Pratt shows up for no reason to ask Summer to marry her felt out of place, but still caused my vagina to cry tears of joy.

It's hard to criticize a film that puts so much care into integrating breasts into the plot in a satisfying way. I don't want to spoil anything, but I'd pay attention to Montag's 3-D cleavage near the end of the film. Trust me, you'll be glad you did.

Lohan missing from clubs, presumed dead

After three straight days without being photographed vomiting in an alley, falling on her face, or with mysterious white powder around her nostrils, various reliable media outlets are reporting that Lindsay Lohan is, in all probability, dead.

The starlet, whose recent big screen successes include cinematic gems like I Know Who Killed Me, failed to show up for several scheduled appearances this week, causing many to speculate that Lohan has gone to the great crack house in the sky. Club promoters are especially baffled, since she was to be paid in vodka and self tanner.

"Even when Lindsay was in rehab, she never missed a night out," said Trip Skittles, a bouncer at Chateau du Crack. "I held back her hair while she puked all the time. I'm worried for her. I just keep watching Georgia Rule over and over and crying. Because it's a shitty movie, you know?"

On the contrary, Lohan's manager Ben Abler, when reached for comment, said that Lindsay is alive and well, and just decided to spend a few nights at home while she recovers from an aggressive case of holy fuck I wasted all my money on drugs and now I can't pay my rent.

"Seriously," said Abler, "after several hundred attempts to get her to return to rehab, Lindsay has said, 'maybe, maybe, maybe.' We're seizing this open window and getting her some fucking help before she shits the bed."

"I'm not being figurative," Abler added.

Lohan has yet to publicly comment or tweet about it, meaning the writing is pretty much on the fucking wall. Fans of the dead wacktress may attend her public memorial this Friday at Hooters. The brief service will be followed by a screening of Herbie Fully Loaded and an open bar. Lohan would have wanted it that way.

Quantum TV spoils Lost before it's produced

NOT TO BE OUTDONE BY THE recent popularity of 3 D cinema and television, scientists in Switzerland have developed what they're calling the next big thing in home entertainment.

International research organization CERN has taken the concept into the fourth dimension, creating a breakthrough technology they call quantum television, or "LHC TV" for short.

CERN has been making headlines recently for its massive Large Hadron Collider particle accelerator, which was constructed in hopes of discovering new forms of matter. Henri Marseau, lead developer on the project, says that the breakthrough came as a result of down time between experiments.

"We've got this trillion dollar machine just sitting here, taking up space underground. Scientists and physics nerds alike have been holding their breath for the better part of a year to find out if we'll make any scientific breakthroughs or just end up destroying the universe from the inside out. I thought I'd put the equipment to use in the mean time."

While the exact science behind quantum television is extremely complex — and according to the Vatican, wicked — Marseau explained that it would soon become a common household fixture.

"Basically, it's entertainment that occupies four dimensions at once: time, space, second space, and the forbidden zone. By simultaneously tapping into these four realms, viewers will experience entertainment in the most immersive way possible."

Some of the technology's major features allow viewers to watch programs at their convenience, skipping commercials, watching them after they've aired, or with the new premium feature, before they've even been produced.

"We're especially excited about the advance viewing feature," Marseau said. "So far, we've been able to predict next fall's hits and misses, and watch the series finale of Lost ... but even with the parallel universe commentary switched on, Proto Abrams' vision still doesn't make sense."

Reeling from the failure of its investments in HD DVD, electronics producer Toshiba has become the primary financier in commercializing the technology. Together with CERN, they hope to debut the first LHC TV by last fall, just before the 2009 holiday shopping rush.

Wanna see Meryl Streep's fur burger?

IF KIM CATTRALL CAN DO IT... Meryl Streep isn't a stranger to playing challenging roles, but she may be facing her most difficult role yet as she attempts to woo an audience into finding her sexually attractive. With countless Oscar nominations for films such as Mamma Mia!, The Devil Wears Prada, and Julie and Julia under her belt, the obvious next step would be the portrayal of a sex addict.

Sources say that Streep has been spotted outside various Super 8 motels with real-life sex addicts such as Tiger Woods and Jesse James, helping her prepare for her role. "They've been inspirations for me," she told a Vanity Fair reporter earlier this month. "There's just so much to being a sex addict that I didn't know about. Who says method acting can't be awesome?"

After reportedly opening her beef curtains to hundreds of men, Streep is ready to take the image of sex addict to another level. "I'm ready to make the world look at sexual deviants in another light. If you thought I was amazing in Kramer vs. Kramer, just wait until you see my 'performance' in Cram Her vs. Cram Her," Meryl reveals.

While Streep does have years of acting experience on her resume, Woods and James have reported that the 60-year-old actress has centuries of sexual experience in her pants. "The wrinkles and saggy tits are just a facade," Tiger responded, "but in actuality, she's better than the porn stars I've slept around with, and fucking guys is their job!"

"I was faking it," Streep giggles. With 13 Oscar nominations tucked in her garter, Streep believes that she's a strong contender for Best Actress at this year's Academy Awards.

"They better give me an Oscar for this shit," she said last week. "Whose dick do I have to suck to just get another one of those fuck-

Porn star furious that boring sex tape has leaked

TOO MUCH INFORMATION The Internet was set abuzz Wednesday morning with the leakage of Bambi Bangle's controversial sex tape — something Bangle is claiming should never have occurred. "It's just shameful," the distraught adult entertainer told Metraux over the phone from the set of her latest film, Clit Attack! II: Revenge of the Slit. "I mean, to think that people out there are just objectifying my body ... well, I have no words." Bloggers have already begun discussing the tape, in which Bangle is seen with her longtime fiancé and fellow porn star Daniel Ramstein. The two are said to spend the length of the film "engaging in clinical, passionless missionary sex, followed by a rousing half-hour game of Scrabble." "I'm obviously mortified," Bangle sighed. "You've got a reputation to uphold in this business, you know, and when something like this hits the mainstream media, then it can take years to recover the damage. I've lost out on a role in the upcoming Seymour Vaginas production of Better Ejaculate Than Never." Bangle's performance in the home video has already garnered 45 million hits on XTube, with thousands of well-written and articulate comments discussing the star's apparent lack of libido. "She's just laying there like a starfish," noted Nightweaver20xx. For her part, Bangle is begging her fans not to judge her by the circumstances. "People need to understand that some things should be kept private, and sometimes even the rich and fabulously endowed need to have a few secrets behind closed doors. So what if Danny and I have a bit of a kink for vanilla positions? Maybe if people tried it once in awhile, they wouldn't be so judgmental."

JoBros go Juggalo

WILL THEY CALL THEMSELVES JUGGABROS? After carefully cultivating their wholesome family image for four albums, the Jonas Brothers have announced their next studio album will be their first foray into the Juggalo lifestyle. While some in the industry have already begun to distance themselves from the group, the brothers confirmed they are now "down with the downs."

"It really felt like the next logical step for us, artistically," stated Kevin Jonas, who is now going by the moniker Ray Pissed. "Jesus spoke to me in a dream and told me to throw my purity ring into the fires of Mount Doom and curb-stomp some haters for Christ, so eat my shit."

The band has adopted a more edgy lifestyle, including holding hands with girls they've just met, paying for expensive purchases in quarters, and disobeying their mom.

"The teachings of Violent J encourage this type of debauchery," explains Nuggs McHatchcock (Joe Jonas). This sentiment was apparently also echoed by Fuggnuts Gangstasack (Nick Jonas), who is currently recovering from a spell of "exhaustion," which may be a direct result of staying up past his 9 p.m. bedtime and consuming too much Faygo.

Production will begin on the album as soon as the brothers finish their homework and Mrs. Jonas gives her permission.

Return of the Gosselins

SERIOUSLY, HAVE YOU SEEN KATE ON DANCING WITH THE STARS?

Sources reveal exclusively to the internet that, after a string of failed attempts to get back on television, the Gosselin family will be returning to TLC with their new reality show, Jon and Kate Plus Ape, in which the estranged couple will attempt to raise a large African mammal in addition to their brood of eight.

"I already married a monkey," reveals Kate. "Once I can teach both Jon and Cheetoh to stop having poop fights, it won't be so bad."

Other titles on the table were Jon and Kate Plus Weight, in which the couple would bully each other into developing eating disorders; Jon and Kate Plus Date, in which each parent would take turns being the awkward third wheel while the other attempts to get laid; and finally, Jon and Kate Plus Snape, in which the couple would receive counseling from Harry Potter's mysterious professor of the Dark Arts.

"I thought the idea was Dumbledore," said Jon. "So we — poop fight!"

Jon and Kate Plus Ape premieres this Friday at 7 p.m. on TLC after a new wacky sitcom called 19 Kids and Mounting, about Catholic Priests and the fun-loving altar boys who will never be able to trust again.

Leno suffers from limp dick

YEAH, WE WENT THERE Just when you thought the public opinion of Jay Leno couldn't fall any lower, details are now surfacing which reveal that the on-again, off-again host of the Tonight Show has been impotent since he took over the show from Johnny Carson in 1992. This explains his unhealthy obsession with Viagra, and also what his extensive car collection is compensating for.

"I can't help it: all of my penis blood is trapped in my chin!" said a distraught Leno late last night to TMZ reporters. He was actually crying and it was kind of embarrassing for everyone involved.

As for Conan O'Brien, he's as virile as ever, still fucking his wife on a semi-regular basis, just like a good Irishman should.

"I can't take all the credit," he admitted on his twitter account (@ConanOBrien). "After all, I am a ginger."

Jesse James turns back time

IT'S TOO LAAAATE TO 'POLOGIZE Jesse James is reportedly building a hot tub time machine in his West Coast Fappers garage.

Apparently, James plans to go back in time, not to stop himself from cheating, but to avoid getting caught. Or, at least, fuck more bitches before he was publicly humiliated one month ago.

Metraux spoke to a fellow sex addict from the Arizona clinic where James was seeking treatment who had this to say: "Y'know, even if he doesn't actually get it to go back in time, he's still got a sweet hot tub that he can use to rail skanks in in real time. So, it's win-win."
